But it was supposed to snow again the next day. On a recent Wednesday afternoon, I sat in line at the drive-through of our neighborhood CVS pharmacy. I was the third car in line, and the car at the front seemed to be camped out at the window, clearly negotiating something as complex as tax reform rather than just dropping off a prescription. I have multiple degrees! Then I looked at my dog. He looked like a lab but was white with brown ears. He sat down, barked sharply, barked again. This is ridiculous, I thought. We watched The Dog Whisperer obsessively. What am I doing with my life? I walked over and popped the Prozac in his mouth. He sat contentedly by the bookcase, his legs splayed, tail gently thwapping against the floor. Perhaps we in America really were ridiculous, over-medicating even our animals, too likely to reach for a pill as a solution to our problems, focusing on issues far beyond what was necessary for survival. Then, as I kept waiting, I consoled myself with the idea that there were quite a few pet owners out there who could relate to me. I sat down for a moment to check my email.
