My boyfriend says never say never, though. If the result is positive and a patient is going to take Viagra for a long time, it becomes expensive enough to buy some Viagra. The danger with Viagra comes when users buy it online or from dealers instead of going through a doctor. You've got to try it. It seems that even the very idea of Viagra is enough to make some women aroused. Boyfriend looks up at me. For a man who claims to have taken Viagra 'only eight or nine' times, he has a very healthy supply. One says Viagra stops him from sleeping properly. It's enough for my friends to believe they can be porn stars for a night. And in a funny way, Viagra can actually help a cocaine user, because it does the opposite thing to the blood vessels. Even though some of us are doctors, journalists, management consultants and lawyers, we spend our free time indulging ourselves like wealthy, overgrown teenagers. It doesn't make you more aroused; it just distributes blood around your body in a certain way, and in my boyfriend's case, a particularly welcome way. Pfizer set up a female sexual dysfunction unit a few years ago, comparing Viagra in women to a placebo, but the study had to be stopped because 85 per cent of the women responded to the placebo. With this in mind, I think there can be no harm in trying it once. He explains that there are actually three different drugs on the market: I first heard about taking Viagra for fun when my boyfriend's housemate Dominic bounded into the kitchen one morning, grinning and flushed with a new-found cockiness.
