They are the nicest people, and very patient about looking up medication costs for me. The ruling also suggests that healthcare costs in the U. If you want to check drug prices without having to call individual pharmacies, check out goodrx. In fact, if plaintiffs' factual allegations are correct, the chain of causation runs as follows: Wow, I had no idea it was that expensive. My son was just prescribed Abilify, as a solo anti-depressant, and I see here it isn't even supposed to be used for that nor prescribed to children under 18 years old! Lilly had a pricing strategy called "premium drug, premium price," and health insurers didn't do anything to stop it. Lilly promoted Zyprexa as superior to other drugs for schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, and also downplayed its dangers, such as weight gain and diabetes. Abilify costs less than the Hep-C drugs, but those are time limited treatments. And yet press us to write for 20mg or more, so how do we make those mg sample packs last with such daily dosage recommendations? It looks as if Lilly stuck with its pricing strategy since Gee, that would be fun to watch for those of us who are sick and tired of profit margins dictating care interventions. Lilly distributes misinformation about Zyprexa, physicians rely upon the misinformation and prescribe Zyprexa, TPPs [third-party payors] relying on the advice of PBMs and their Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committees place Zyprexa on their formularies as approved drugs, TPPs fail to negotiate the price of Zyprexa below the level set by Lilly, and TPPs overpay for Zyprexa. Geodon was kind of pricy too, I think.
